

chapter 2 - thrust curves

This script calculates an aircraft's required and available engine thrust across three different altitudes to evaluate flight performance. It uses aerodynamic formulas to compute lift and drag based on the aircraft's weight, wing geometry, and the varying air density at each altitude. Finally, the code uses the Matplotlib library to plot these calculations into three stacked graphs, illustrating the performance envelope alongside typical takeoff and cruising speeds.